CLASSICAL THEORIES OF REALITY

MEANINGFULNESS AND THE CONCEPT OF DIVINITY

The source of all noble human behavior is human consciousness. Reality is a form of implementation of what is thought from the human mind in full consciousness. Reality is a collection of thoughts of all humans that manifest into a unified collective reality which is commonly known as social reality because it is a combination of what is thought, addressed, and realized together. The social reality is then reinterpreted by human consciousness, so that every human being can learn from the collective reality that is being faced. From there, life experiences and human values are explored and can be applied for the good of humanity itself. Each person has their own perception and awareness which will produce many experiences and values that vary from one person to another.

This book contains how reality is interpreted by personal human consciousness, understood as a living ecological system. This book also explains the human need for the value of the culture in which he lives, because culture is the result of wisdom produced through thought and self-contemplation, therefore culture helps shape and maintain human behavior to always be in accordance with his nature as a creature Rahmatan lil alamiin. There is also a kind of internal guard for human behavior which is also the result of interaction with culture, namely morality. Morality serves as a defining and limiting line between behavior that is still accepted by the culture, and behavior that is not acceptable. The book also contains early concepts of divinity. God is a living entity that is lived by humans since human consciousness can accept it, until an indefinite time limit. Man will hold on to what he perceives as God. Religion is introduced to humans since they are still children so that in the course of their lives, religion and God, as well as morality are able to maintain behavior between humans, humans with nature, humans with the environment to remain harmonious, which in the end humans will get the perfect meaning of life.

By knowing and understanding social reality based on reality theories, it is hoped that readers will be able to explore deeper and more meaningful life experiences and meaning in the midst of waves of diversity. The more diverse the conditions that color social reality, the richer the perspective and meaning. This book will guide readers to achieve this condition. Happy reading.
